The pipe for the water works at Sanford has been delivered, and workmen are engaged in excavating the tranches to receive it. At the spring from which the supply is to be taken, a busin has been constructed, and the bottom of this is covered with twelve inches of water, and a ten, inch stream flows constantly from the outlet, so there is little danger of a famine at any time in consequence of a severe sucreptracted drought. Should such a thing occur, the supply can be increased by driving a few feet lower.

As is well-known, in the days of placer mining the sands of the Fenther river afforded some of the richest diggings in the State. The Argonaut grew sidulenly wealthy along its hanks. From its source to the smooth sliding waters of the floor to the Sacramento Valley it richly rewarded the spade and cradle. Above Big Bend and below it the river was easily worked. Just after the river leaves the gorge is the site where $680,000 in dust was taken out in forty-two working days from 3,300 lineal fect of river-bed.

There is one fact with relation to Big Bend Tunnel which makes it of more interest than usually htaches to such enterprises. A tunnel of this character, as soon as it has served its purpose, is generally of no further value for, any one. In the present case, the Feather River will be made to flow beneath the mountain range until the last grain of gold in the fourteen miles of river-bed shall have been scenred. But when the river shall have been surned back into its own channel, there will begin, in all probability, a new and more important era for the tunnel—its use by an overland railroad line.—San Francisco Buttetin, September 10.
